Background To This Study

Back in the fall of 2007, Courtland Brooks conducted a pioneering study that set out to compare the various white label dating providers and their service offerings. The objective was to assist potential dating site owners in making a more informed decision over which provider to shortlist / select.

A lot has happened in the intervening period since our inaugural study was conducted. The online dating industry has grown rapidly, more people than ever before are using online dating services and competition within the sector has risen dramatically. One of the main growth trends has been the emergence of a new breed of dating sites, one that is niched around shared user interests. By offering online daters a more targeted dating experience and matching them up with users who share the same interests, these niche sites have seen strong growth... generally at the expense of more generic mass appeal dating services.

The Rise of Niche Dating and The White Label Model

The concept of niche dating has proved very attractive to webmasters and affiliates who have warmed to the idea of setting up their own portfolio of online dating sites. But how can you possibly hope to compete against the large established players like say Match.com or e-Harmony who spend millions of dollars promoting their brands both on and offline? How do you get over the 'cold-start' issue of not having any active members in your database for any traffic you generate to view and interact with on your site? In a recent study Courtland Brooks highlighted the pitfalls of trying to purchase your own user database to address this issue (view study here) and our recommendation was then and remains still... don't. Remember to be competitive in the online dating sector you will also need to provide first rate levels of customer service, profile moderation, secure billing, software, hosting, etc., the list goes on. The reality is that the resources and revenues needed to deliver all these vital components are sizable and experience of successfully operating a dating business is priceless. So unless you have very deep pockets or lots of financial backing then the only viable alternative is to partner with a White Label provider. Working on a revenue share business model they will provide all these services for you, leaving you free to concentrate solely on what you do best; driving and acquiring traffic to your dating site(s) of choice.

But the question still remains and one we still get asked a lot... which White Label provider should I choose?

To make this task easier we decided to update our initial study, as much has changed in terms of White Label providers and the services they offer since our first study in 2007.

Study Methodology

In terms of methodology our analysts compiled a list of the main companies, both large and small, who offer White Label dating software and services, for inclusion within this comparison study. However, as the type and scale of services and support varies by provider, we then drew up a list of 'key influencers' that a prospective partner should be taking into consideration when assessing which company or operator is best suited to their needs and requirements (see table below).

Key Selection Criteria	What To Look For
1. Company Overview	Length of sector experience, size and scale of the operation (revenues, people)
2. User base	Countries served and how many new members join up each day (very important metric as this keeps the user database 'fresh' with active members)
3. Product offering	Does the operator offer true niche dating (e.g. by interest) or just by network? Do they offer an adult network / niching? Do they accept payments via PayPal or via mobile? What currencies does the operator support?
4. Pay-outs	What is the commission structure? (see accompanying comments for more details) What is the pay-out frequency? (i.e. how quickly do you get your money) Does the operator offer pay-outs on any incremental revenue add-ons/upsells? What currencies does the operator pay-out in?
5. Partner Site Optimisation	Do they offer any partner PR or marketing support? Do you get allocated a dedicated partner manager? Do they offer a site reporting and campaign management tool / software?
6. End User Customer Support	Series of key questions designed to identify the scale and type of customer care, support, moderation and retention the operator provides; all of which will help to keep and retain customers for longer, thereby maximizing lifetime value
7. Languages supported	Which languages does the operator support?
8. Courtland Brooks Provider Summary	Concise summary based upon the information published on their website and answers to the key criteria questions above

A Changing White Label Operators Market

Since the last study was done the white label operator landscape has altered considerably. Whilst some companies that were part of the original study have grown rapidly and increased their market share, other leading players have declined and are no longer featured or have been surpassed by new entrants. Others have evolved to concentrate more on developing their own in house sites international expansion and revenues over their white label service.

In terms of new entrants, the sector has seen the arrival of The Dating Factory, whose primary focus is on International non-English speaking markets, although English is supported. They offer true niche dating and are particularly strong in certain European markets. However, no information was provided as to their revenues (to gauge scale/success) and the numbers of new joining members their platform attracts.

Cupid PLC (formally EasyDate) successfully listed on the AIM market in the UK in 2010 and has subsequently focused primarily on growing its own in-house brand dating sites (Cupid.com, BeNaughty, Flirt.com, etc.) particularly internationally. Consequently Cupid's white label division now represents only a small part of their overall business compared to when our original study was first conducted. Whilst Cupid's white label division does offer niching, this is by network only (e.g. adult or non-adult), rather than true niching by defined interests, e.g. music tastes, income, ethnicity, interests, hair colour, divorced, etc.

Finally WhiteLabelDating.com (WLD), who as the name suggests specialise in and are now the market leaders in this sector. WLD have grown rapidly since our first study from £3m to £30M and are now the fastest growing online dating company in Europe/ EMEA according to Deloitte . WLD offers true niche dating and their software and services power over 7,200 partner sites across all leading English speaking dating markets. Other differentiators include; a large team of dedicated partner managers; class leading levels of customer care, support and moderation; the only white label operator to have a dedicated customer retention team. In delivering approximately 15,000 new joining members a day to their platform, WLD's partners are assured of a highly active pre-populated member database. Over the peak post-Christmas period WLD claim to have one new member registering every four seconds to join their platform. Finally, at the i-Date Awards (the online dating industry's own awards), WhiteLabelDating.com was voted as the Best Dating Software Provider for the third consecutive year: reaffirming their commanding position in the sector.)

In addition, where an explanation as to the Key Criteria in more detail was deemed suitable I have added this as a comment from myself, Mark Brooks. Likewise for those operators who responded to our request for answers to these Key Criteria, where greater detail has been supplied by the operator this too has been added to the spread sheet as a comment to provide the reader with more supporting information. These are worth reading.
